The timber for a new county bridge across the canal at James street has arrived. The work is being delayed, as there is some objection made by those who are interested to having a wooden bridge erected. They think the County Board of Freeholders should build an iron bridge similar to the on crossing the brook on James Street.

Watsessing Notes. George Peterson of the Young Men's Republican Club is canvassing the Watsessing district for money to purchase the Republican campaign banner.

Active Hose house is not the popular resort that it was several years ago. Its decline in popularity dates from the adoption of a resolution excluding representatives of the press from the house. The decline of Active Company furnishes an object lesson to other institutions which if they are wise they will heed.

A Sketch of Sam Sloan. Unique among railway monarchs stands Sam Sloan, president of the Lackawanna. He writes his name simply "Sam," not that he wishes to be familiar with himself, but it saves time. Mr. Sloan's hair is abundant and white as snow, his eyes are as bright as diamonds and his huge jaws bespeak the bull-dog that he is. He hates typewriters-male, female and mechanical—and writes all his own letters in autograph with a big gold pen. No wonder that some of his epistles are short and curt.

His venerable secretary handles some of the routine correspondence of the executive office, but his chief duties are confined to opening and arranging the mail and entertaining distinguished bores who are turned over to him. For the Trunk Line Association, which assumes to maintain rates and regular methods, Mr. Sloan is a heavy cross to bear. The old gentleman is proverbially foxy, and, while agreeing to all forms and fads, persistently fails of fulfilment. When he is taken to task he feigns astonishment and threatens dire vengeance upon his subordinates, who he, explains, have not carried out his instructions. "When we get Sloan on the gridiron," said a trunk line president to a Kansas City Journal man, "and apply the inquisition in a manner that would make Depew, King and Roberts sweat blood, what do you suppose the old man does? He leans back in his chair, by Jupiter, and goes to sleep. Mr. Sloan rules the Lackawanna with a rod of iron. It is emphatically a oneman institution, and Mr. Sloan is the one man. The old gentleman has a warm spot in his beart for the clergy, and the Lackawanna issues annual halffare permits by the hundred, all of which bear Mr. Sloan's personal signature, and, in accordance with one of his many peculiar orders, are filled out personally by General Passenger Agent Holwill with

While an absolute ruler, Mr. Sloan is noted for his fatherly watchfulness over his oldest and most faithful employees, to whom he extends all sorts of delicate kindnesses, usually disguised as imperative orders, given with eccentric bluntness, as if the old patriarch were ashamed to show that there is any ten-

In 1580 the Azores came under the power of Spain, and in the history of the next twenty years their name is frequent as the favorite battleground of the English and Spanish fleets. The partiality was, indeed, mainly on the side of the former, and for a good reason. These islands lay right in the track of all vessels sailing to and from that enchanted region known than to all men as the Spanish Main. On the highest peak of Terceira, whence in clear weather the sea could be scanned for leagues around, were raised two columns, and by them a man watched night and day. When he saw any sails approaching from the west he set a flag upon the western column, one for each sail: if they came from the east a similar sign was set up on the eastern col-

Hither in those days came up out of the mysterious western seas the great argosies laden with gold and silver and jewels, with silks and spices and rare woods, wrung at the cost of thousands of harmless lives and cruelties unspeakable from the fair lands which lie between the waters of the Caribbean ses and the giant wall of the Andes. And hither, when England too began to turn her eyes to El Dorado, came the great war galleons of Spain and Portugal L meet these precious cargoes and convoy them safe into Lisbon or Cadiz before those terrible English sea wolves could get scent of the prize.-Macmillan's Magazine.

Important Advice.

A gentleman who believed that to an important extent clothes made the man, even when the man is a royal personage, visited the Comte de Chambord at Frohsdorf a few years ago. The Comte de Chambord was the grandson of Charles X, the last Bourbon king of France, and the French Royalists called him Henri V, and hoped, until his death, in 1883, to restore him to the throne. The marquis, of whom this story is told, was a Parisian, a man of fashion and an ardent Royalist. The Comte de Chambord was glad of an opportunity to talk over political affairs with a man who must know what was going on in Paris; so after a few minutes' chat he said: "Marquis, it is not often that I have a chance to talk with any one so well informed on the signs of the times in Paris as yourself. Now in case I return to Paris. what would you advise me to do?"

He waited for a bit of profound political philosophy. The marquis looked at "Henri the Fifth" and hesitated Should he venture on a great liberty But his advice had been asked; as a loyal subject he would give it frankly. "Sire-monseigneur," he stammered, "I think you had better give up your German tailor and have your trousers made in Paris." "My trousers!" "Yee, sire; pardon me, but your trousers are out of fashion."-San Francisco Argonaut.

Strange Effects of Extreme Cold. Dr. Moss, of the English polar expedition of 1875-7, among many other things, tells of the strange effects of the extreme cold upon the candles they burned. The temperature was from 35 to 50 degs. below zero, and the doctor says he was considerably discouraged when upon looking at his candle he discovered that the flame "had all it could do to keep warm." It was so cold that the flame could not melt all of the tallow of the candle, but was forced to eat its way down, leaving a sort of skeleton candle standing. There was heat enough, however, to melt odd shaped holes in | TII the thin walls of tallow, the result being a beautiful lacelike cylinder of white with a narrow tongue of yellow flame burning on the inside and sending out many streaks of light into the darkness. -St. Louis Republic.

Montclair's Danger.

The Montelair Herald is doing a good work in calling public attention to the unhealthy water supply furnished the people of that town by the Montelair Water Company. The Herald claims that the physicians of the town are with it in its fight against impure water. Montclair is in immediate danger of an alarming epidemic, judging from the allegations of the Herald. A paper that has the interest of the town so much at heart as the Herald would not expose its bad water supply unless the necessities of the case imperatively demanded it.
